NARRATIVE

On December 30th, 2024, at approximately 4:12 PM, I responded to the front counter of the police department to speak with Bryan Mansell regarding a theft.

Mr. Mansell informed me that he and his father own a large collection of LEGO sets valued at a significant amount of money. He mentioned that many of these sets are vintage and difficult to find. As his father is getting older, they decided to explore options for selling the LEGO sets and collections. Mr. Mansell chose to work with Bricks and Minifigs, located at 3670 River Rd N.

Mr. Mansell explained that he entered into a contract with Chrystal Law, who was the manager and owner of the store at the time. He stated that the contract was signed on November 22nd by Chrystal Law on behalf of Bricks and Minifigs. The agreement (JAS1) specified that Mr. Mansell's collection would be sold in the store, with a portion of the profits going to the company. Mr. Mansell would retain ownership of the product until it was sold, and Bricks and Minifigs would be responsible for any shortages, losses, damages, etc.

Mr. Mansell mentioned that Chrystal Law lost ownership of the store, presumably due to a lack of payment, and that the business was transferred to "Brandon Best." Mr. Mansell stated he tried to contact Mr. Best to discuss the contract, but Mr. Best claimed to have no knowledge of it and insisted that Mr. Mansell's products were no longer in the store. Mr. Mansell disagreed, asserting that he has rare sets still in the store and that people he knows have gone in to confirm their presence (video footage is JAS3). He noted that his sets were marked with a yellow sticker on the box or a white tag on the mini figures to avoid damaging the product.

Mr. Mansell provided me with a detailed inventory list outlining which sets were in his possession, which sets were in the store, and which sets had been sold. He mentioned that his lawyer sent a letter via certified mail to terminate the contract with Bricks and Minifigs. According to Mr. Mansell, the contract required that the products be returned to him within ten days, but this return did not occur.

Mr. Mansell informed me that at one point, Ms. Law took some of the sets home after the business was broken into, as the premises would not be secure until repairs were completed. He confirmed that she later returned the sets to the store, and he recognized them when he saw them there. However, when I asked if he verified that all the sets that were supposed to be there were indeed present, he replied that he did not check all of them, but the "expensive" sets were back in the store.

I spoke with Brandon Best, who mentioned that he believed the contract was with Chrystal Law and not the company itself. Mr. Best claimed that the company had seized everything in the store as part of their assets and stated that Ms. Law was no longer a franchise owner because she owed a substantial amount of money. I found out that Ms. Law began taking items to her car, claiming that they were on consignment.

I also spoke with Ms. Law, who told me that she had been escorted out of the business by Brandon Best and had not returned since. She stated that corporate had informed her they would discuss the future of the store with her, but upon arrival, they stated they would be taking over the store. Surveillance video of this interaction is stored in evidence under JAS4. When I asked Ms. Law if the company allowed consignments, she replied that there were no explicit rules against them and mentioned that she had discussed this with corporate, who had given her the green light.

Ms. Law noted that when corporate took over the store from her, she brought up Mr. Mansell's collection and claimed they assured her they would handle it. I asked how someone could identify items from Mr. Mansell's collection, and she explained that she placed tags and yellow stickers on the figures and boxes to indicate which items belonged to Mr. Mansell. Furthermore, she stated that she has a legal case against the company and intends to pay Mr. Mansell if the case is resolved favorably and she receives any money.

I contacted Ki McAllister ([REDACTED]) cNeff, who are the Director of Operations, CEO, and COO of Bricks and Minifigs, respectively. I learned that Mr. McCallister was on the phone with Mr. Best while Ms. Law was being escorted out of the building.

Additionally, I found out that Ms. Law purchased the franchise unit, assuming all responsibilities and acquiring all associated products that were in the store. I asked about consignments and was told it was an unauthorized franchise practice. Ms. Law ceased paying royalties and currently owes the company over $100k. I learned that they terminated the franchise agreement and took over the store, seizing assets and forfeiture. I was told items were set aside that they thought belonged to Mr. Mansell. However, they'd taken inventory of the store the night they took it from Ms. Law and did not see many of the items that were on Mr. Mansell's inventory list they received. It appears Mr. Mansell's lawyers and the company's lawyers are attempting to get everything sorted out but are not communicating well.

Mr. Mansell called me on January 9th, 2025. He told me Ms. Law contacted him and found some of his product at her house. She returned over 230 mini figures and 12 or 13 smaller sets. She also had "Cloud City" sets which were returned as well. It's unknown if Ms. Law had these in her possession because she took them from the store the night she was escorted out or if she had them all along. I attempted to contact Ms. Law but was unsuccessful.

Mr. Mansell was notified that this case was a civil matter. He disagreed, but I explained to him I did not have enough to proceed on a criminal level. He stated he would continue to work with his lawyer in hopes of resolving the matter.

NARRATIVE

On May 5th, 2025, I spoke with Bryan Mansell, who had more information about this case.

Mr. Mansell was displeased that no arrests had been made thus far, and after speaking with me at length about his belief in the criminal nature of this case, he provided me with more photographs.

Mr. Mansell told me the photographs he sent (JAS7) were taken the evening Chrystal Law was escorted out of the store. Further, in one of the photographs is Brandon Best, who Mr. Mansell said claimed to not know anything about the consigned sets. The photographs themselves were evidently taken from inside the store by Ms. Law before she left.

I looked at the photographs and noted multiple boxes of sets that had a round yellow sticker on the box with a price tag over the top, or just a hanging tag on the separate mini figurines. This is how Mr. Mansell described the display of his sets. He claimed Ms. Law put the yellow sticker and price tag over to differentiate between Mr. Mansell's sets and others.

The photos show approximately 17 larger sets, 5 "Microfighter" sets, and 27 mini figures. Adding up what I could see as far as pricing goes, the total value is estimated at over $6200, not including the Microfighter sets and 18 other figures I could not see a price on.

One photo shows Brandon Best in the background, whom I confirmed via the Ring recording of Ms.Law being escorted out of the building.

I called Mr. Best and asked him if he knew what happened to the inventory with the yellow stickers after the night Ms. Law was escorted from the building. He stated he was not sure what had happened to everything and added that he hadn't been in charge of the store until the end of March, and corporate had another manager come in and manage the store until the transfer of ownership was complete. Ms. Best claimed that corporate had seized everything in the store when it was taken over.

I advised Mr. Best that if, throughout the investigation, someone is determined to have committed a crime, an arrest may occur. I also warned him that if the property amounted to over $10,000, it would potentially be an Aggravated Theft I.

I later received word that Joshua Johnson called, unhappy that I'd called Mr. Best and spoke to him about potential crimes relating to this case.

I called him back and learned he is a franchise co-owner along with Mr. Best. Mr. Johnson told me that the business absorbs all inventory in the store once it's taken over. I asked to see this contract, and Mr. Johnson stated he would attempt to get me a copy from corporate.

Mr. Johnson added that there were many items in the back of the store at that time, but said the vast majority of them were layaway items. He said that people would come in and prove they'd put money down for an item, pay the rest to them, and they'd give the customer the item they'd paid for.

Mr. Johnson added that a few of the items matched what Mr. Mansell described as his, and those items were set aside. However, due to the claim that Mr. Mansell continues to call the business despite being told not to, and encouraging others to do so as well, he does not want to give these items to Mr. Mansell. He added that he also doesn't feel he needs to, since the store's inventory became his once he took it over.

I called Mr. Mansell and gave him an update.

At the request of the Mansell family, please forward this report to the District Attorney's Office for review.

NARRATIVE

On May 14th, 2025, I spoke with Trinity Jordan, whose firm represents the corporate office for Bricks and Minifigs. I learned that the firm has been trying to resolve the issues between Bryan Mansell and Bricks and Minifigs. Mr. Jordan stated he did not receive an inventory list of items from Mr. Mansell that would have noted which LEGO sets were in the store at the time of Ms. Law's departure.

Mr. Jordan continued to tell me the items that Mr. Mansell hasn't been communicating with the firm, which claims to be trying to resolve the issue with Mr. Mansell. In the meantime, LEGO sets in the store that could potentially be Mr. Mansell's have likely been set aside until confirmation on whether they are his. Mr. Jordan stated he would email me with any other information.

Forward with the original and supplementals to the DA's office.

NARRATIVE

The following report contains interview(s), which were digitally recorded. Those interview(s) have been summarized below. The purpose of the summary is to render an overview of what was discussed; however, it is not intended to be a transcription of the interview(s). It is intended to give the reader a general understanding of what was stated. For exact details or wording, refer to the recording(s). What follows is a synopsis of the incident based on my observations, recollections, and investigation. This report is not meant to replace or be an exact record of the event(s). Please refer to any recordings for a verbatim account.

ACTION TAKEN

In December of 2025, I was assigned to review this case and conduct any further investigation that may be necessary.

Investigation Review

- 12/30/24: Bryan Mansell reported to the Keizer Police Department that he had entered into a written contract with Chrystal Law on behalf of Bricks and Minifigs (BAM), located at 3670 River Rd N, in Keizer, to sell, on consignment, an extensive collection of Lego sets on 11/22/23.
- Key components of the contract with Chrystal Law:
 - Mansell authorized BAM with the right to sell.
 - BAM agreed to pay Mansell a 65% portion of gross sales to be paid on or before the 15th of each month.
 - BAM shall keep accurate records regarding the quantities sold, and Mansell shall have the right to inspect such records and the remaining inventory from time to time.
 - Consigned merchandise shall remain the property of Mansell.
 - Bricks shall be responsible for all shortages, losses, or damages to items under their control and maintain adequate insurance to pay for replacement.
 - Mansell shall have the option to cancel the agreement with a 14-day written notice. Bricks shall have the option to correct the problem within the 14-days, to remedy defaults.
 - The agreement shall be binding on any successors of the parties.
 - The agreement may be terminated by either party by providing 30 days' written notice to the other party. This Agreement shall terminate automatically on January 31, 2025. All unsold Star Wars Legos shall be returned to Mansell within 10 days of termination of this Agreement in their original condition.
- 11/15/24: Law had ownership of BAM taken over by corporate.
- Brandon Best took over management of the store.
- Mansell contacted Best, who denied any knowledge of Mansell's contract with Law and BAM, and stated to Mansell that his (Mansell's) items were no longer in the store.
- Best reports that he believed the contract was with Law and not the company itself. He reports that the company seized everything in the store. Best reports that Law began taking items out of the store to her car, claiming they were on consignment.
- Law reports that she was escorted out of the store by Best and had not returned since. Law reports that she brought up Mansell's collection and said they assured her they would handle it.
- BAM reports Law purchased the franchise unit and subsequently stopped paying royalties. BAM terminated the franchise agreement and took over the store, seizing assets. BAM reports that items were set aside that they thought belonged to Mansell. BAM reports they took inventory of the store the night they took it from Law, and did not see many of the items on the inventory list they received from Mansell.
- 01/09/25: Mansell reports that Law contacted him and returned over 230 minifigures and 12 to 13 smaller sets and the "Cloud City" sets.
- 05/05/25: Mansell provided photographs taken by Law the night the store was seized, showing multiple sets in the store marked (yellow stickers) as Mansell's.
- Best reports that he is not sure of what happened to everything, as there had been another manager until the end of March, when he took over. Best reports that corporate seized everything.
- Joshua Johnson, co-owner, reports that the business absorbs all inventory in the store once it is taken over. Johnson further reported that there were many items in the back of the store at that time, but a vast majority were on layaway. Johnson said a few of those items matched Mansell's description and were set aside. Johnson reports that Mansell continues to call the business and have others call it, so he does not want to give these items back and doesn't feel he needs to, since the store's inventory became his once he took over.

- 05/14/25: Trinity Jordan, legal representative for BAM, reported that they were trying to resolve the issues with Mansell. Jordan reports he has not received an inventory list from Mansell. Jordan reported that Lego sets in the store that could be Mansell's have likely been set aside.
- 05/14/25: Investigating officer reports the district attorney's office declined to prosecute the case as it is civil.

Submitted Evidence Review

- JAS 1 :
 - Consignment Agreement between Mansell, Law, and BAM.
 - Letter dated 11/22/24 to BAM and Best notifying of cancellation and termination of the consignment agreement for failing to provide payment and refusal to allow inspection of the inventory.
 - Inventory List of items.

- JAS5:
 - JAS5 is a lengthy video that appears to be a parking lot meet-up with Law, Mansell, and several unidentified subjects, during which property in Law's possession is returned to Mansell. The following is a brief synopsis of the video, and the entire video should be viewed for full content and context:
 - Law says she has the items because she had not yet cataloged them, and they are not on the inventory spreadsheet. She further says the items are in the original bags that Mansell's father had placed them into.
 - Law says possibly three items have a white sticker or tag that may be on the inventory spreadsheet.
 - Law had separated 327 minifigures into bags of 20 and written down all the numbers for the items.
 - Mansell asked if a valuable figure, the "Finch Dallow" was still present, and Law confirmed that it was.
 - Law explained that she had these items separated so employees did not sell them until she had them inventoried.
 - Law stated, "This won't have anything to do with Brandon and corporate, because it's not, but because they're yours, and I had them, then needed to go back to you."
 - Law stated the identified things in Mansell's collection with white price tags along with yellow stickers.
 - Someone within the group said that the stickers had since been removed, and price stickers were applied to the boxes.
 - Law states there were four staff members at the store that could confirm that is how she marked the items.
 - Law says the Cloud City set is among the items but they (BAM) still have everything else. Law went on to say she had sold a set on Bricklink, but the buyer claimed it was damaged and returned it to her and she issued a refund.
 - Law said some of the sets were items she took to Rose City Comic Con, and one of the subjects recalled seeing Law at Comic Con.
 - Law provided Mansell with a written lists of items to match against the items she has. Mansell compares the items to the lists and then signs the lists.
 - Law explained that they put white tags on mini figures and yellow stickers on sets. She further explained they had two inventory buttons, one for minifigures and one for sets. When an item was sold, the staff was to document the number and price on the ticket.
 - Law explained that she had since been locked out of the "Heartland" account, which held sales and inventory, and they (BAM) could have deleted inventory items. There was then a discussion about the history of an item being visible in the system.
 - The group then discussed someone going into the store and making a video of items. One person said they went into the store and got the staff to admit there was a collection. When asked about layaway, the staff stopped talking, and the person left.
 - There was then a discussion about layaway items and Mansell receiving partial payments for some of the layaway items. Sets were retained by the store until full payment was made. Mansell asked what was happening with the people who had put money down on layaway items, but Law did not know. Law suggested that if they went back into the store to try to buy something, they ask about the Ewok Village because she knew it was extremely rare and had been on layaway.
 - Law says that she has not been able to reach out to her past employees, [REDACTED] and [REDACTED], but would be interested in knowing what happened on the Friday morning after the store was seized. She went on to say that if they followed their normal pattern, they would have put the minifigures and sets out on the floor with the tags and stickers and that would be a clear indication that he (Best) had them the next day that he cannot deny. Law did not think he (Best) would have had time to pull all the tags and stickers before Friday morning.
 - Law talks about having a camera that was not discovered until the following Thursday and did not believe any items left the store. She also knew Best stayed in the store for two hours and then left and did not believe that was enough time for him to remove the tags and stickers.
 - Mansell said by the time he got to the store the shelves were pretty much clear, except for some mini sets and newer sets, but the bulk of his collection was gone. Mansell said he was told that he does not have any way to prove that it was his stuff.
 - Law said BAM had still not provided her with an inventory that they promised they would do within 15 days. Law said that she took pictures and video of the inventory that was in the store when they left, and Best was there.
 - There is a discussion amongst the group about BAM needing to be able to prove where their inventory in the store came from.
 - There is a discussion about BAM doing the same thing to other stores.
 - Law talks about the store running gift cards under her account saying it is fraud every time they run a card.
 - The group discusses involving social media and exposing what BAM is doing to Lego. Law further talks about the BAM franchise agreement and what would happen if Lego revoked BAM's licensing rights.
 - Law and Mansell talk further about the set that shipped and returned, and Mansell inspected the set.
 - Mansell took possession of the sets and minifigures that Law brought to him and the two sign a document.
 - The group talks about an incident of Lego thefts in the Eugene/Springfield area.

Continued Investigation

Bryan Mansell Interview

On 12/23/25, I spoke with Mansell by phone, as he was out of state; this conversation was digitally recorded (JIW1). Mansell told me he had several issues with how the Keizer Police Department handled this case. The main issue he had was being told that this case was a civil matter, and that things can be both civil and criminal at the same time, yet no one was doing anything about the criminal aspect of the case. Mansell said BAM is holding stolen property at this point, and he (Mansell) has proven that to the police. Mansell explained that he has provided photographs, video, and evidence that they (BAM) had knowledge of his collection in their store and continue to sell it. Mansell further explained that he sent people into the store to buy sets and provided that information to officers.

Mansell pointed out that in the original police report, the investigating officer stated they observed over $6000 of the collection in the store and told the manager they needed to return the items or they could be arrested. Mansell pointed out that the report documented that the BAM corporate called the investigating officer, and the investigation was returned to a civil matter.

Mansell said the officer was inaccurate when they wrote in a report that both parties had decided to allow their attorneys to resolve the issue. Mansell denied he had ever made any agreements, and the only involvement an attorney had on his behalf was drafting a letter to BAM notifying them that he was rescinding the contract and that they needed to return any goods still in their possession. Mansell said BAM countered by arguing that it had never had a contract with him, and that the previous franchisee did. Mansell explained that they came in, seized the store, took his collection, were made aware of it, are now lying about it, will not return the collection, and have committed the crime of theft.

Mansell told me YouTubers have gone into the store, and there have been admissions on audio and video that his collection is in the store in a back storeroom. Mansell said he was told they will not return his sets unless he signs an NDA and apologizes to the staff. Mansell told me these videos have not been provided to the police, but the YouTuber who has them is willing to share them with the police. Mansell said the video that will go out are worth more to us than the collection is. Mansell told me that he has already sold the rest of the collection that was in storage in order to ensure the college funds that the money was intended for were funded.

Mansell went on to explain the history of the collection and how they came to make the agreement with Law and BAM to sell it. Mansell explained that the collection was the most extensive, most complete Lego Star Wars collection in the world, valued at $150,000 to $200,000, when he brought it to BAM. An agreement was reached allowing BAM to sell the collection on consignment. No purchase of the collection was made by Law or BAM, and ownership of the collection lay solely with Mansell. Mansell said Law and her husband were very helpful in inventorying and documenting the collection that came into the store. An agreement was reached allowing BAM to sell the collection on consignment. After Law and BAM agreed to sell the collection, Law began advertising an event to unveil it, and it was a huge event that was advertised.

Mansell said everything was fine for the first nine to ten months; things were being sold every month, and Law was paying him for those sales. Around November 15th of 2024 he called Law to get his monthly check from Law, but she was not responding. After several days he called the store and asked for Law and was told she was no longer with the company. He spoke with a manager and told him that his collection was stocking half of the store. He said the manager told him that he had never heard anything about this and asked him to come in with an inventory list and the contract.

Mansell went into the store later in the day and gave Best a copy of the inventory, a copy of the contract, and showed him his identification to prove who he was. Mansell showed Best the videos of the unveiling of the collection, showing the entire collection in the store, marked with yellow and white tags, as evidence that his property was there. Mansell said while Best was viewing the videos, Best commented, "Oh, is that Crystal (Law)?" Going on to say that he had never actually met Law before. Best went on to tell Mansell that this was the first time he had heard of it and that he did not know anything about the collection. Best told Mansell when they came in to seize the store, Law had ransacked it. Mansell said that while he was talking to Best he could see multiple sets that were his and pointed that out to Best. Best replied by asking how Mansell knew they were his, and Mansell told him because every micro series set in the store was his. Mansell said the conversation kept going back and forth. He noted that it started with Best not knowing anything about the collection, to Law stealing the collection, to Law may have left some things in the store, to if they find anything, they would like to continue to sell it. Mansell was not allowed to look around the store or the storeroom to see if his sets were there.

Upon leaving the store, Mansell called Law and left her a message. Law called him back right away, telling him that her attorney told her not to contact anyone, but that it sounded like in Mansell's message, the new owner was accusing her of stealing everything. Law told him that she did not steal anything from him, and later sent him a video of the night the store was taken from her. In the video is Law, Best, and on the phone, a guy named Adam from corporate in Utah. In the recording, there is a conversation about the consignment, with Adam telling Law that it was a business deal and that, since they are taking over the store, they would be taking over anything related to the consignment. Law also sent Mansell photographs of that night showing all of his sets clearly marked with yellow dots, tons of figures with white tags around their neck. He said there was also a video of Law and her husband leaving the store with nothing in their hands. Mansell said at this point, alarm bells were going off in his mind because he had been lied to by the people at BAM.

Mansell said he met up with Law about 15 days later, when she returned some sets and minifigures she had in her possession. Mansell explained that Law had some sets in her possession because she had just returned from Rose City Comic Con, where she had brought a bunch of stuff to sell at a booth. He said they recorded the return and signed a paper saying she returned those sets to him. Mansell told me the next he knew Law and her husband moved to Spain.

Mansell told me he sent an inventory list to BAM, created by one of their own staff members at the store, Law, and that it was not something he just created; it was incorporated into the contract. The inventory list was used to keep track of everything, so as items were sold or put on layaway, they were marked as such on the inventory. Mansell said about $20,000 of the collection remained in his possession, and the remainder was in the store.

Mansell said they ended up calling the police that night after talking to Law. He said he went back down to the store, and when he arrived, it was locked, with the officer inside talking to the store owners. The officer came out, spoke with him, and told him it sounded like a civil matter. Mansell showed the officer the videos Law had sent him that showed that they were lying, telling the officer that they were sitting on stolen property. Mansell pleaded with the owner to settle things amicably and let him go into the store and look to see if his collection was there. The owners would not allow him into the store and would rather have him go through the courts or file charges against them.

Mansell had a letter drafted to cancel the contract and demand the return of the property within 14 days. He said BAM did not agree with his inventory list, telling him that anyone could have produced the inventory, despite him showing evidence that their staff had produced the list, a history of BAM selling his property and paying him, and photographs of his property within the store. Mansell said at this point, corporate stopped talking to him, telling him it was a franchise issue. When Mansell attempted to contact the store, police were called, and he was threatened with arrest if he did not stop calling, despite having a legitimate legal/business reason to do so.

Mansell went on to tell me that, technically, corporate stole his property when it overtook the store from Law, but keeps trying to hide behind the franchise, saying it cannot control what franchisee owners do. Mansell said corporate had control of the store for three months before it transferred ownership to the new franchisee management. Mansell said there is evidence that they were aware of the collection in the store, evidence that they continued selling items, evidence that they admitted to selling items, and evidence that they admitted to being in possession of the collection, but they refuse to return his property to him, which was valued at least $150,000.

Mansell discussed other grievances he had about how the initial investigation was handled and his displeasure with the police department and the district attorney's office for not taking action. He also talked about a YouTube channel, Collectors Weekly, On Your Bumper, that did a segment on his story. Mansell and I agreed to meet the following week so he could provide me with further information.

I met with Mansell on 12/30/25 at about 0906 hours at the Keizer Police Department. I advised Mansell that I was recording our conversation (JIW2). Mansell talked about the topics we had previously discussed regarding the criminal aspect of this case.

I inquired as to the monetary value of the remaining property at BAM. Mansell told me the collection consisted of 720 sets and 1500 minifigures, worth between $150,000 to $200,000. He said he had around $21,000 in storage that never went to BAM. He said that Law sold approximately $27,000 to $28,000 worth of sets/minifigures and paid him his 65% cut of that. He told me that there should easily be $100,000 left.

Mansell added from our previous conversation that he specifically had Law count up and type up an inventory of the collection going into the store, and email him said inventory from her BAM email, so it would be evidence that she, their employee, created the inventory. Mansell told me he made a handwritten inventory list over the 15 years they were building the collection. Mansell also added that the day that he went into the store, Johnson came out, without introducing himself, snatched the contract from his hand, and then walked to the back with it. Mansell added that Johnson is a corporate guy and part-owner of the store. Mansell said Johnson later came back out and told him that he had been on the phone with corporate. He said Johnson continued telling him the contract looked pretty good, but none of that stuff was there, and they didn't know anything about it. Mansell told me he left the store that day believing that Law had stolen everything. After conversing with Law, he believed BAM, Johnson, and Best were being deceitful because they had made up multiple narratives about what had occurred, and he believed they were, at this point, knowingly holding his property from him and actively selling his stolen property.

Mansell said that Johnson and Best were just playing stupid. He said the photos that Law took the night she left the store and gave him prove that his collection was in the store and were marked with tags. Mansell pointed out that Best claimed he never met Law, but in the video of when she is being kicked out of the store he is there. He said Best accused Law of taking everything, with Best in the background. Best later claimed that none of the sets were in the store that night. Mansell said even if Law had stolen the sets, they were now in possession of them, stolen property. He pointed out their story changed from not knowing anything, to Law may have left some stuff, to they had his sets in the back, to they bought the store from Law, so he needed to go get his money from Law. Mansell said he provided them with the inventory that Law created, and they just dismissed it, saying he could have just typed it up.

Mansell told me he had a friend go into the store last December and purchase one of his sets, and took photos and recordings of the interaction. He said the clerk told his friend they had a collection and that there had been a spreadsheet, but that they were under new management and she did not know where that had gone. Mansell said that was further evidence they had his collection and continued selling it despite knowing it was not a part of their stock. He went on to say in the recording of the night that corporate took over a conversation, where a BAM corporate person can be heard telling Law that the consignment was part of the business and that they would be taking it over since they were taking over the business.

I clarified statements made in Supplement 2, in which BAM attorneys indicated they were trying to resolve the issue, but had not been provided with an inventory. Mansell said that was false. He said they had tried to communicate with BAM, and they strong-armed them. I inquired about the non-disclosure agreement. Mansell told me Johnson sent him messages about a month ago. Mansell said Johnson had told him it would cost him $70,000 to get the collection back civilly. Mansell told me he talked with an attorney, and Johnson was absolutely correct, but the attorney told him he did not need to do that because this is a criminal case.

Mansell said that at this point, he decided to involve the media in his case after a YouTuber heard about the situation. Mansell said that corporate originally told them they would work with anyone, wouldn't support franchisees engaging in illegal activities, and would help him get reconnected with his property. He said corporate, then turned around and sent them a cease-and-desist letter and threatened to sue them. He said that a bigger YouTuber has picked up on the story now. He said the newest YouTuber has a lot of video and audio talking to Johnson about the situation and him giving different accounts of what happened. Mansell said that Johnson, Best, and Best's wife also started putting positive reviews on the store to try to cover up the negative reviews.

While Mansell was looking for what Johnson had sent him, he gave me a stack of receipts and a returned check (JIW3). He indicated that those receipts were from the time Law was selling items from the collection in the store. Mansell explained that on the 15th of every month, he would call Law, go over to the store, pick up the receipts, and a check for payment. Mansell also had a check that had bounced, with the receipt that showed Law's signature. Mansell said that this all shows they were conducting business. I later reviewed the receipts and saw that they showed sales from September of 2023 to June of 2024. The individual receipts showed the buyer's name, product purchased, and products of Mansell's appeared to have been circled, there were also sticky notes attached to the top of each group of receipts showing totals for the month.

Mansell showed me the text string from Johnson and later sent me screenshots (JIW4). The conversation was as follows:

[REDACTED]

Wednesday, December 3

Johnson: Hi Brian, this is Johnson from the Salem BAM store. Please call me when your have a chance. It would be nice to be done with this and give you the Lego we have set aside. 1:12 PM

Thursday, December 4

Mansell: Unless you are ready to make us whole on the Lego collection, I don't see where we have anything to discuss. 1:32 PM

Johnson: We can give you what was left when Crystal left. We can't and aren't responsible for what she sold the two years you all were working together. If you want what she left let me know. 1:43 PM

Johnson: Do you want it? Yes or no? 1:52 PM

Johnson: We have been holding on to what had stickers on them. We put them in the back. Let me know if you want it. Otherwise leave us alone. 1:56 PM

Friday, December 5

Mansell: Could you send photos of everything you still have in the store. We will also need a copy of the completed store inventory list when it was seized to determine what sets you have sold. 8:36 AM

Johnson: There were a couple of sets she had on layaway we sold. But anything that had a sticker on we put in the back. 8:45 AM

Johnson: I'm not doing this to open a door for you to criticize us, or fault find. We have some sets with stickers on them. That's all we could identify as yours. A list of inventory does not indicate where it came from. Your sets were not the only star wars sets in the store. 8:47 AM

Johnson: We were told that if it had a sticker on it, it can be from your agreement. We set those aside. 8:47 AM

Mansell: Please send photos of the sets you still have in store as well as an inventory list showing what you sold. 8:59 AM

9:19 AM, Dec 5

Johnson: I don't have an inventory list of what was sold. Here is what I am offering: The sets that were marked with a sticker that we set aside. In return a signed document from our legal team that you sign acknowledging that we are not responsible in any way for your agreement with Crystal and that you will take down all negative comments and things and stop disparaging us in person and online. Formal apology from you to all members of our team. Any remaining losses on your end will be directed towards Crystal Law. As it all should be."

Mansell told me he did not respond to Johnson because he felt what they were asking him to do was illegal and did not trust that they had not sold sets. I asked Mansell if he had the original signed contract, as the only contract I had seen was unsigned. I later received an email with an image of the signed and dated contract dated 01/03/24, which appeared to be the same contract I had previously reviewed (JIW5). I asked Mansell if he knew who managed the business between the time that corporate seized the store and Best and Johnson took over. He told me that Best and Johnson came in from corporate, and when he looked up the LLC history, he saw that the business had been seized, was under corporate control for three months, and then converted to a new LLC, and put under a new brand ambassador, Best and Johnson, who have been there since day one.

Ben Schneider Video Review

On 12/30/25, Ben Schneider contacted me and explained that he was a YouTuber working with Mansell to tell the story of what had happened to him. Schneider told me he had video/audio recordings of conversations that he believed would be useful to my investigation. Schneider later provided me with a video of several recorded phone calls with Johnson (JIW6).

JIW6 is a lengthy video of several phone calls between Schneider and Johnson. The following is a synopsis of the video, and the entire video should be viewed for full content and context:

In the first video, Schneider calls Johnson to ask for his Legos back. Johnson is confused by this request and Schneider goes on to explain that is trying to get back some Star Wars sets. Johnson asks why Schneider's Legos are in the store, and Schneider explains that originally, they (Johnson) were supposed to sell the Legos, but then they stopped, so Schneider wanted to terminate the contract and get the Legos back. Johnson tells Schneider he does not know what he is talking about, and Schneider offers to send him the contract. Johnson replies that he did not sign any contract and that, in order for him to be under contract, he would need to have signed something. Schneider countered that Johnson could also be under contract if he took over a store that had a contract. Johnson replied that was not how the law worked, and Schneider countered that it was. Johnson said that he could file a lawsuit then.

Schneider asked Johnson if he just wanted to give the Legos back, and Johnson said no, and that he and Mansel have been a pain in the ass. Johnson said he would have 100% given them back to Mansel until they started being morons; he was thinking about just calling Mansell and giving them back to him. Johnson said he was under no legal obligation to return Mansell's Legos. Johnson said there was only one way to settle things, and it was not by harassing them. Johnson said he was calling the police and that they were going to be arrested for harassment. Schneider asked Johnson whether he felt threatened, and Johnson replied, "Yes." Johnson explained he felt threatened because they keep coming to the store, parking out front, holding fake raffles, calling the store, and harassing the employees, thereby threatening his business. Schneider tells Johnson he is the one threatening the business because he is the one doing the illegal action.

Johnson goes on to tell them that it is a civil matter and to tell Mansell to put his money where his mouth is and take him to court. Johnson said Crystal Law took Mansell's money, and he (Johnson) did not take any of Mansell's money. He went on to say that he never had a relationship or agreement with Mansell, so he could not be legally obligated to anyone he had never had any business dealings with. Schneider told Johnson that he took over the company that had those agreements, so they would fall on him. Johnson explains that the LLCs protect what is inside of them from outside lawsuits. Johnson said that his LLC is separate from Law's LLC. He said Brick and Minifigs is a franchise.

Schneider said an easy way to settle this would be to go through the inventory and prove that Law is the thief. Johnson said that Law had that inventory for almost 2 years and likely sold the majority of it during that time. Johnson said that there were a few sets and minifigs in the store. Schneider offered to come grab those sets, and after that, they could team up to go after Law. Johnson says no (there appears to be a break in the video at this point).

Schneider asks Johnson what they would need to do to get the sets back. Johnson says he would need a written apology from Mansell, all the negative comments removed, and positive reviews to make up for the damage, and then he would give them back. Schneider explained that he did not think Mansell was in control of the negative comments. Johnson reiterates that he did not have an agreement with Mansell. Johnson told them they needed to go talk to all the people they had lied to. Johnson said that he was just trying to rescue the store after Law ran it into the ground. Johnson said he had no intention of taking Mansell's stuff. Johnson said he did not want the stuff, and it is sitting back in a locker, where it is going to stay until we fix this relationship. Johnson repeated that he did not sign an agreement with Mansell; Law did.

Schneider asked Johnson what he would like the apology to state. Johnson responded with, sorry for harassing us, sorry for hitting us with negative reviews, sorry for being jackasses. Schneider said he was not sure they could get rid of the negative reviews, but offered to make up for them with equal positive reviews. Johnson said that would be great, and then he could open the cupboard, and they could have all the sets and minifigs in there. Schneider asked whether they could team up to go after Law, and Johnson responded, "Yes."

Johnson said again that Law had Mansell's stuff for almost two years, and he did not have records to know what she paid him for. He said all he knew was that there were strings around minifigures, and that the sets had dots on them; those were Mansell's. He said that they took all of those out and put them into the cupboard, and they have been there ever since. Johnson said that they were not selling them and had not sold a single set or minifigure that they believed was Mansell's. Johnson reiterated that they were still in the cupboard and that they will remain in there until they do something different. Johnson said that the way they are going about things is just going to piss them off, and they can just sue him for the things and see what a jury or judge decides. Johnson went on to say they could be nice, amend things, shake hands, be nice to one another, and support one another. He said again he had Mansell's stuff and is happy to give it to him, and that he did not want it or was not going to do anything to it. He added that it is costing him money to store the items.

Johnson posed the question of why he would want to help Mansell when he is attacking them. Johnson felt in his mind that he hadn't done anything wrong, hadn't signed an agreement, and had just taken over the mess from Law. Johnson said it was Law who had a bad relationship and bad dealings with Mansell, not him. He said again that Law signed the agreement, not him, and he did not agree to anything in the contract. Johnson said that Law sold everything in the store to the franchise. He went on to say that Law owed the franchise a lot of money and owed the landlord $20,000. Johnson said that the sets Mansell had in the store are sitting in a locker, and that is why he has possession of them now.

Johnson said Law owed $20,000 in rent and $80,000 to $100,000 to the franchise for everything she had done. He said the franchise told her that they would pay her $20,000 rent and forgive her $80,000 to $100,000 debt to them, take over the store, and all of the inventory to offset the debts. Johnson said the franchise paid the landlord's rent and took a wash on all the money she owed them. He said that Law made that agreement, that they could have everything in the store to pay for her debts, so she walked away clean.

Johnson said three to four months later he and Best purchased the franchise from headquarters. He explained that the property has now gone through two hands and that he did not sign an agreement with Mansell and that he bought everything from corporate and they bought it from Law. Johnson said he was under no obligation to abide by Mansell and Law's agreement. Johnson explained again that Law had Mansell's stuff for almost two years and he had no knowledge of what she sold or how much she paid Mansell and Mansell and Law are the only ones who have records on that.

Johnson said when Best walked into the store, as a corporate employee, to help take over the store, there were several sets and minifigures, specifically mentioning "Cloud City", that Law took, and he did not know if she gave those to Mansell or not. He said that Law owes Mansell for the entire thing and for what she sold and did not pay him for. Johnson said what is left in the store was the remainder of what Law did not sell over almost two years. He said there was no way that they took over the whole list when she had two years to sell it.

Schneider suggests they team up and go after Law. Johnson agrees, saying Law signed the agreement and is legally obligated to the agreement. Johnson said that he would be happy to give them the inventory because he is not selling it, it is not doing him any good, and is only bringing him harm because they are doing crap to attack them. Johnson said he didn't know why Mansell was taking this route rather than saying, "Let's figure it out." Schneider said he tried to do that but Amanda, the manager, called the police on him. Johnson clarified that he was talking about the first day, in December, asking why Mansell went on the war path.

Schneider said that he did not know Mansell well and Johnson asked him why he was involved. Schneider said that Mansell wanted to sell off the Lego sets, so Mansell decided to sell some of them to him (Schneider), so they are technically his Lego sets now. Johnson clarified with Schneider that Mansell sold Lego to him that Mansell did not own. Schneider said, according to the agreement, Mansell owned them, and they remained his until they were sold. Johnson said that Law sold them and explained that it is the same whether she sells it to corporate or people walking into the store. Johnson said again Law sold the sets.

Schneider asked Johnson where he thought the majority of the items were sold. Johnson said a majority were bought by people walking in the door. Johnson estimated they had about 15 Star Wars sets and maybe 30 to 40 minifigures that had strings around them and dots on them. Johnson asked Schneider if he understood that Law either sold things to customers or to corporate to pay for her debt. Johnson said that Law owes Mansell all of that money because, under the eyes of the law, Law sold them and was solely responsible for that agreement, and they can't rope people into that agreement who did not sign onto that agreement.

Schneider asked if, besides stealing from Mansell, Law also stole from them. Johnson said she did, but that corporate wasn't going to go after that because they'd settled all of their issues, and she had given them everything in the store. Which was Mansell's sets and everything else within the store. Johnson said that Mansell's sets accounted for only a small percentage. Johnson said that Mansell had told them Law had a separate storage unit, but that he (Johnson) had no knowledge of it. Johnson went on to say that if they went to court, they would say they were customers of Law because they forgave her debt and, in return, she gave them the inventory. Johnson said there was a bill of sale, and it had gone through the courts in Oregon. Johnson said nobody could do anything with this because Law sold it to corporate. Johnson reiterated that Law sold it, that she is the only one who signed it, and that she is the only one responsible for that agreement. Johnson said he is not obligated to give Mansell anything.

Johnson said he bought the whole store from corporate after corporate bought it from Law. Johnson said again that he is not legally obligated to owe Mansel anything. Johnson said they had not sold any of his stuff and held onto it for a reason. Johnson said two weeks ago he had a conversation with the CEO of BAM about calling Mansell and giving him the property. Johnson said Mansell started all this crazy stuff and has broken the law by selling Schneider, because he sold goods that he does not own, committing fraud.

Schneider suggests that they go after Law and get the sets back. Johnson said that he just did not want more damage to the store and that he and Best had done nothing wrong. Johnson said he is the victim here because Mansell is going nuts, writing things online, making threats to break into the store, come in and attack employees, steal the sets, write bad reviews, go on pod casts to bad mouth them, sells the sets to Schneider, and now they are being attacked by him (Schneider). Johnson said he and Best have done nothing but try to run the store, and he is not obligated to Mansell for one cent, and if he were Mansell, he would have already taken him to court.

Schneider says they should get the sets back from Law. He goes over getting good reviews made, an apology from Mansell, and then they can go after Law. Johnson says they can't go after Law because corporate has an agreement with her that has already gone through the courts through mediation and arbitration, and it is on record with the courts. He says they cannot go against that court order and attack Law. Schneider says he guesses they will go after her.

The video then changes to a second phone call, mid-conversation, between Schneider and Johnson. Schneider says that Mansell's main concern was that they were aware they had stolen Legos five days before he showed up, then pretended they knew nothing about it, and that Law stole all of them, even though there were still some in the store. He went on to say that Mansell felt like he was in the dark, but some of it could have been bad communication, and it might not have been bad intent, but he felt like he was lied to. Johnson responds that he did not know what Mansell knew, but that he did not think Mansell knew anything until he walked in the door that day, because Best had never mentioned anything to him.

Johnson said the day that Mansell showed up and surprised Best with this thing, Best was as surprised as he (Johnson). Johnson said he tried to do his due diligence, but Mansell did not like that because he felt like they were being deceitful, which Johnson said they were not. Johnson said that before Mansell came into the store, he did not know that Mansell even existed. Johnson said he did not think Best knew either, because he would have said something about Law having this consignment. Johnson said there were no conversations between him and Best about the consignment before Mansell came into the store. Johnson explained that Best would not know because he had only met Law for 10 minutes while he escorted her out.

Johnson explained that Best, from the franchise, showed up with the attorney, who told Law that her franchise agreement was cancelled and that Best was there to escort her out and take over the keys. Johnson said it was kind of a surprise to Law, but it wasn't a surprise, and she left within 10 minutes. He said that Law loaded up some of her stuff and then left. Johnson said that was all of the communication there had been between Law and Best and that there would not have been time for Law to say anything about a consignment deal. Schneider confirmed with Johnson that when Best kicked Law out, she did not say anything about a consignment. Johnson said to his knowledge that it was correct. Schneider also confirmed that Best knew nothing about a consignment. Johnson responded, "Correct, how would he?" Schneider asked whether corporate had told Best that he would be taking over the consignment. Johnson responded by asking how corporate would know about the consignment.

Schneider goes on to tell Johnson that Law told Best that Mansell had not yet been paid, and that if they were taking over, they would owe money to Mansell. Johnson responded that she was full of crap, and how would that ever come up? Johnson asks whether they think Law's foremost concern when the store was being taken over would be a consignment deal, or would it be, where is my purse, and I am out of here? Schneider explains that he was told Best was on a call with corporate, during which they discussed the consignment deal and that corporate was taking it over. Johnson said Best was on a call with Adam, because Law did not know who Best was, but knew Adam. He said Adam was explaining to Law that Best was there and corporate was taking over the store, and it was not a conversation about Mansell or the consignment. Johnson denied that the consignment was ever discussed.

Johnson went on to say that they were there to take over the store. Johnson said the consignment was in violation of the franchise agreement, and that no BAM is supposed to do consignment. He said that Law having that consignment was against the rules, so no one would ever believe or consider that there was a consignment because that is not how BAM operates. He said that if Law did say anything about a consignment, it wouldn't mean anything to Best, because he was just there to take the keys and make sure Law didn't damage anything on her way out the door.

Johnson said that at the time, the sets were on the shelves and the minifigures were in the cases. Johnson said they conducted an inventory without knowing the sets/minifigures were Mansell's. Johnson talks about the condition of the store and the filth and garbage left behind by Law. Johnson commented that he highly doubted that in the final minutes of Law being in the store, she would have mentioned this Lego deal. Johnson thought even if the conversation did occur, it would have registered with someone because BAM does not do consignments.

Schneider asked Johnson when he found out there were stolen sets. Johnson remarks that they are not stolen. Johnson said they found out about a consignment deal the day Mansell walked in the door. Johnson explained that he was in the back on phone calls, and Best was in the front of the store. He said Mansell walked in the door and hit Best, from left field, with this consignment deal. Schneider confirmed with Johnson that this was both his and Best's first time finding out about this consignment, and Johnson said it was.

Johnson said he went out to the front, and Best was talking to Mansell. Best tried to quickly catch him up with what was going on. Johnson said he told Mansell off-hand that they could honor the agreement, do the consignment, and pay him. Johnson said Mansell was being really aggressive, and he questioned himself as to why Mansell was acting like this. He said that Mansell handed him the agreement, and he then went to take a call and read the agreement. Johnson said that he was shocked because they don't do consignments, and the situation seemed fishy, and Mansell is getting anxious, defensive, and emotional. Johnson said they would gather up Mansell's things, but needed a day or two to figure things out.

Johnson said that Mansell reacted by saying that they were stealing his stuff. Mansell said he had an agreement with BAM, and Best replied that they did not sign anything and explained that Law signed that agreement and that agreement is not binding on them. Johnson said Mansell thought the agreement was signed with BAM, but it was signed through Law's LLC. Johnson said that because of this, Mansell thought that the agreement would just transfer over, but that is not how agreements work. Johnson said Mansell then started demanding stuff on a list. Johnson said that Mansell said there was $200,000 on the list. Johnson said that when they took over the store, they assessed the inventory at around $40,000 for the entire contents of the store. Johnson said that it sounded ridiculous that Mansell would be coming into the store saying that amount. Johnson said he wanted to figure it out and have time to read the agreement, but Mansell got mad and started swearing at him. Johnson said he may have been dismissive at first, but the situation seemed ridiculous.

Schneider talks about Mansell's perspective of seeing that his items were stolen and maybe directing his anger at the wrong person. Johnson said he could understand why Mansell would be upset and that Mansell got screwed. Schneider asked Johnson if he wanted Mansell to apologize for putting that anger towards them instead of Law. Johnson replied, yeah, for attacking them, sending the police, and sending people to threaten and murder them. Schneider said that he had a conversation with Mansell, and he said that they had asked if they could do a full inventory of the store, and he (Johnson) responded that the contract looked good, but they would need to take them to court.

Johnson said that Mansell came in the door saying there was $200,000 worth of inventory in the store, but their inventory only showed $20,000 in the store, and the shelves were bare, and it seemed ridiculous. Johnson said Mansell started accusing them of stealing, which Johnson responded to by saying that he had not stolen anything from Mansell. Johnson said Mansell said he had stolen and was going to call the police, and he told Mansell to call the police. Johnson said he did not steal anything. He talked about Schneider accusing him of stealing his stuff and denied it.

Schneider talks from Mansell's perspective, saying that if you buy stolen goods, they are still the property of the person from whom they were stolen. Schneider says Mansell can still come in and claim the property because that is what the law says. Johnson replies no, and if that were the case, he needed to go see all the people that Law sold things to. Schneider attempts to explain a law. Johnson explained that it is not stolen because there was an agreement, and it is a civil matter, not a criminal matter. Johnson said that if they were going to be hostile to take him to court. Schneider says it will take Mansell three years for any court settlement and cost about $70,000, and Mansell cannot go that route. Johnson said that Mansell needs to sue the correct party, and that would be Law, not him and Best.

Schneider said he thought that Mansell would go after Law for the 90% she has and the 10% he and Best still have. Johnson says that he has 10 to 15 sets sitting there, and if Mansell got a judgment against him, he would give them to him. Johnson said that if Mansell had not become accusatory and he and Best knew nothing about it, of course, he (Johnson) was going to dig his heels in. Schneider said that Mansell told him in a conversation today that he felt bad about it and did not know that they did not know about the deal. Schneider felt that Mansell had never heard Johnson's full story and had a new perspective at this point, and maybe things were just badly communicated to him. Schneider said that Mansell was open to apologizing.

A new video begins, and it appears to have been taken outside of the BAM corporate offices. Schneider and Mike, and an unidentified male who appears to be with BAM. Schneider asks to speak with Matt, and the male tells him they are not getting Matt and asks several times what they need. Schneider tells the male that they wanted to talk about some Legos they were holding onto for them. The male asks who they are with, and Schneider replies some friends. The video is edited and jumps ahead. The male asks again what they want. Schneider tells the male that they are holding some of their Legos. The male denies this, and Schneider asks him if that is a lie. The male responds no, then says he is asking them questions because they are harassing him.

The two go back and forth over what constitutes harassment. Schneider says they are harassing him because they will not give back their Legos. The male asks Schneider what entities he owns and if he understands the law. The male begins explaining entities doing business, then they can go their separate ways, and then those entities no longer do business together. The man tells Schneider that he is at his place of business for a complete and separate entity and that he has never done business with Schneider and inquires if Schneider has done business with him. Schneider said that corporate was the one who came and took over the store.

The man tells Schneider that he is wrong. The man asked Schneider if he had ever done business with BAM Franchising. Schneider responded that he had about a month ago. Schneider said he bought Legos that they had in their store. The man explained that they do not sell Legos. Schneider tells the male that they took their Legos. The man denies this, and Schneider says he thinks that is a lie. Schneider said that BAM took their Legos about a month and a half ago, on October 1st, 2025, in Keizer, Oregon. Schneider says they were Mansell's Legos, who had $200,000 worth in the store. The male said, no that never happened. Schneider said that if they do have their Legos, they just want them back.

The male said that they had explained this to Mansell multiple times. He explained that Law was the owner/franchisee of Bricks and Minifigs. Law took Mansell's Legos, sold them, didn't pay him, didn't pay corporate royalties for almost a year, they terminated her, and she fled the country, and she has Mansell's money. Schneider tells the male that he has security camera footage of Law saying the Legos were still in the back, sent pictures of the Legos, and sets could be seen in the video, and corporate comes and throws her out.

The male said he understood what Schneider was talking about, but believed he (Schneider) had a misunderstanding of what had occurred and taking one person's word over another person's word. He said that they have talked to Mansell multiple times now, and his attorney reached out to them, and BAM attorney reached out to them. He said they would be more than happy to help Mansell go after Law, who has his money and his Lego sets, and if there were ways they could identify anything else, they would help him. The man said Mansell was unwilling to work with them. Schneider explained that Mansell asked for the store inventory. The man responded that they asked Mansell to provide them with any documentation, and he provided them with a spreadsheet that was not proof of ownership or proof of anything.

The man tells Schneider he has no reason to talk to him about this because Mansell hired an attorney to talk with them. The man said they will work with the attorney. Schneider tells the man that he now owns the Legos, so it involves him. The man told him no, BAM Franchising never entered into an agreement with Mansell. Schneider countered that they took the Legos that were Mansell's. The man replies that they did not. Schneider further states that the Legos were in the store, and they took them. The man said Mansell gave those Legos to Law. Schneider said Mansell did not give them to Law. The man said Mansell has to deal with that. Schneider said Mansell tried to, but they called the police on them. The man says he will call the police on them too because he felt Schneider did not seem to understand the rationale. The man then questions Schneider about his experience with attorneys and the court on this type of stuff.

Schneider told the man that Law never owned the Legos, and by taking those from her, they had acquired stolen goods. The man told them to work with an attorney. Schneider said this was the easy way, and they could just give the Legos back. The man said they do not have the Legos and that Law sold the Legos. Schneider said that Law did not sell the Legos and that they still have the Legos. The man said again that they did not, and that there were one or two items that might be the case. He said they told the new owner to set them aside and try to figure this out. He said that Mansell told them no, and said they either pay him all this money or he would continue to harass and do all sorts of illegal behaviors.

The video jumps ahead, and the man tells Schneider that he (Schneider) does not really understand how businesses operate. The man tells Schneider he is not trying to say that he is dumb, but that he hasn't taken the time to understand how business works and how he does not know the difference between a franchise owner and a franchise. Schneider counters that it was corporate that came in and took over the store. The man said they had it for less than 24 hours before a new franchisee bought the store. Schneider said the theft happened when corporate took it over. The man said there was no theft and asked Schneider whether he knew the legal definition of theft. Schneider says it was theft by receiving. The man talks about needing to know the property is stolen. Mansell did not come in until days later. Schneider tells him that is a lie again. The man says it is not, and the video ends.

The video switches to Schneider talking to Johnson again on the phone. Johnson says they have pictures of everything that was in the store on the day of, and the shelves were empty. Schneider said they asked to see the pictures and the inventory and were told no. Johnson questioned whether he ever said that to Schneider. Schneider responds, not to him but to Mansell, and Johnson questions if that actually got said to Mansell. Schneider said it seemed like they really did not want to work with them. Johnson responds that yes, because they have been hurt by them. He said Mansell came in the first day "guns a slinging" and they told him they didn't know anything about this and to give them some time to figure it out. He said that Mansell demanded to go through their stuff that day.

Johnson said that Mansell made a choice that first day, and that was the choice they were living with now. Johnson said he could not understand why Mansell didn't think Law was the one. Schneider said that he thinks Mansell thinks Law stole a lot of them, too, but there are a lot of bad parties involved in this. Schneider said they could give them the Legos right now. Johnson said that it was not up to him and that they would have to get corporate to do it. Schneider asked if they were Mansell's sets, why he could not have them back. Johnson responds that they are not Mansell's, and Schneider counters that according to the consignment, they are.

Johnson says he is not to go down that route, and it does not matter. Schneider said it does matter because he thinks Mansell's sets were stolen by them and they are refusing to work with them. Johnson said that was not the case because Mansell signed a contract with Law. Law sold it to corporate. Corporate essentially sold it to him and Best. Schneider argued that Law did not sell it to corporate according to the franchise agreement as it is not a bill of sale. Johnson said the agreement said that everything in there became part of the franchise. Schneider argued that it was not Law's to give. Johnson said it did not matter. Schneider went on to say it was stolen Legos from Law, and they took over the stolen Legos. Johnson said the only way for them to fix that difference of opinion is for a court to decide. Schneider disputed that saying it was the law.

Johnson asked who enforces the law, and Schneider responded that the courts do. Johnson said exactly. Schneider said Johnson was basically saying he was wrong, but they could sue him for it. Johnson said that yes, that was the long and the short of it. Schneider told Johnson he knew he was wrong and that he had stolen the Legos. Johnson said no, and that all he was saying was that Schneider had an opinion, and they are interpreting the law differently. Schneider questioned how Johnson was interpreting the law differently, and Johnson stated that is why they have courts. Schneider questioned how that is not theft. Johnson said no one goes to court who has the same opinion. Johnson said the only people who can decide are a judge and a jury. Schneider asks Johnson's opinion. Johnson said his opinion was that the franchise agreement says the franchisee takes everything in the store regardless of whose it is or whose it isn't. Johnson said they wanted to throw mud, make accusations, so he (Johnson) could go "fuck" himself.

Schneider said he just wanted to get Mansell's Legos back. Johnson says they are not Mansell's Legos, so shove it up your "ass." Johnson says they can do this the good way and stop accusing people and saying "shit" or we can fight and asked Schneider to pick. Schneider said well you stole the Legos and Johnson responds, "fuck you" you stole them "bitch." Johnson then calls Schneider a thief who stole them by being stupid. Johnson said to just stop, and what they are talking about is getting an agreement signed and being done with it. Johnson says that Schneider's point of stealing is wrong, and he didn't care about Schneider's opinion. Johnson says he can get them a piece of paper, they can sign it, and be done with it, and that it is their choice. Schneider says they have given them a month despite them saying it would take them a day, so let's go to court. The two argue over Johnson's claim that it would take a day. The video ended.

Mansell Update

On 01/15/26, Mansell emailed me to report that a friend of his had gone by the BAM store and said it appeared they were winding down the business. He said there was a sign outside saying they were accepting cash only, and the store was starting to look empty. He added that it appeared they were clearing out inventory and getting ready to shut down. He was concerned because he did not think they would be keeping accurate records of sales, and would sell all the remaining inventory of his property that they had previously admitted was property in the store. He was also concerned they would flee the area to evade prosecution, and the people who were currently running the store were from out of the area. I advised Mansell that, because the district attorney's office had already deemed this case a civil matter, I would not take action unless it was under a warrant.

On 01/20/26, I sent an email to Mansell advising him that the police investigation should not influence or dissuade any decision regarding the NDA with BAM or the retrieval of the property. Mansell responded that he cannot legally sign an NDA, asking them to hide a crime.

On 01/23/26, I contacted Mansell to inquire whether he had sold Legos to Schneider. Mansell told me he had not, and that was just footage for the YouTube video.

Brandon Best Interview

On 02/05/26 at about 1335 hours, I spoke with Brandon Best by telephone regarding the circumstances surrounding the takeover of the BAM store in Keizer. I recorded this conversation (JIW7).

Best told me that he was present on the evening Bricks & Minifigs corporate took control of the store from Law. He reported that his role that evening was to take control of the store from Law after corporate delivered the notice. Best said he was not fully aware of all the details leading up to the takeover, but he understood that Law had violated franchise policies and had fallen behind on royalty payments. Best stated that Law claimed she had no prior knowledge that the store would be taken from her that evening; however, corporate representatives indicated she had been given ample prior warning.

Best stated that conversations with Law included a discussion of conducting an inventory count to determine the store's current condition. Best said Law was informed that at the conclusion of the evening, her store key would be taken and that this would be the final night of her operation. Best described the interaction as initially amicable, but stated Law later refused to leave the store and made various claims disputing the takeover. According to Best, Law claimed she was current on payments, asserted the franchise lacked authority to remove her, and stated that members of the Lego community, and other businesses would oppose new ownership. Best stated he believed these claims were made to delay her removal from the store.

Best advised that he initially went to the store alone, but later contacted franchise representatives by phone after Law refused to leave. Best would not identify the specific corporate representative involved, but later admitted that the representative was Ki McAllister. Best stated that Law briefly mentioned a consignment arrangement, but did not provide the names of those involved. Best informed her that consignments were not permitted under BAM policy and that any such arrangement would have been outside franchise parameters. Best explained that he thought Law was making things up to prolong staying in the store.

Best stated that following the takeover, previous employees, that had been working for Law, were still working in the store. He said he asked both employees whether any consignment arrangements existed, and both said none did, commenting that they don't do consignments. Best further stated that the store's inventory levels were significantly lower than expected, estimating approximately $32,000 in inventory, compared to a typical recommended minimum of $150,000 to $200,000 in cost value, which would be contrary to a large consignment being in the store. Best told me he had the names of the employees but would not disclose them to me. Best stated that an inventory was conducted that night using product knowledge and assistance from corporate staff to estimate the total value of the store. He advised that he provided a total inventory value to corporate of approximately $17,000.

Best reported that weeks later, Mansell contacted the store by phone, asking to speak with Law. Best advised him that Law was no longer associated with the business. Mansell became defensive, asking how the owner gets fired, and he (Best) explained that he could not get into the details, but Law was practicing some things corporate did not like. He said that Mansell later came to the store in person, stating he had supplied Lego Star Wars sets to the store under a consignment agreement with Law for the last year to year and a half.

Best stated that this was the second time he had heard claims of a consignment arrangement. Best thought Law had put Mansell up to this to try to "rob" the store. Best briefed the corporate team had they requested documentation to substantiate the claim. Best explained that they are a second-hand Lego store, so they would naturally have different Legos and retired sets, and different things that come in, so it would be hard for them to pinpoint items. Best stated he did not observe any obvious markings, stickers, or tags in the store that would clearly identify consigned items. Best said he believed Mansell had been told by Law that was how she marked things in the store. Best stated that Law had the entire day prior to the takeover to remove any property from the store. Best denied observing her remove specific items that evening.

Best advised that Mansell later produced a written contract with Law. Best described the document as poorly formatted and irregular. Best stated that after the claim was raised, items were informally identified by Mansell, though he could not definitively identify which items belonged to him. Best said that Johnson told Mansell to take the items, but Mansell declined saying he was not sure what was his and what was not. Best stated that the items in question were treated as seized assets under the existing dispute between BAM and Law.

Best advised that at the time of these events, he and another individual, Johnson, were acting as management staff on behalf of the franchise and did not own the store. He stated that they later took ownership of the store, but it was transferred back to corporate due to the ongoing dispute, and the store is under corporate control at this time. Best stated that Mansell has since retaliated by making allegations and attempting to damage his reputation, though he stated he had no direct involvement in the contractual agreement between Mansell and Law.

Ki McAllister / Matt McNeff Interview

On 02/10/26 at about 1415 hours, I spoke with Ki McAllister and Matt McNeff on the phone, who are with BAM corporate. I recorded my conversation with McAllister and McNeff (JIW8). I explained to McAllister and McNeff that I was calling to inquire about their knowledge of the takeover of the BAM store in Keizer.

McNeff told me Law had a contract with BAM, and she did not abide by that contract, and the contract was terminated. He said Law owed BAM over six figures. Part of the contract was that all assets of the store could be seized to offset the amounts owed to BAM. McNeff said they communicated with Law about the issue, and she accepted it and was on board all the way up to the point they showed up to take over the store and conduct an inventory. He said that once that happened, Law became belligerent and uncooperative.

McNeff said they were not aware of the agreements Law had made. He added that such agreements would violate their franchise policy. But were made aware of some of that when different phrases and terms were used. After the fact, Mansell came forward, saying he had an agreement with Law and that a certain amount of the store's inventory belonged to him. McNeff said they let Mansell know that they would try to work with him and coordinate and cooperate. He said that Mansell was initially cooperative and said that he would have his attorney reach out. McNeff said they tried to work with Mansell's attorney, but that attorney stopped responding to them. He said Mansell then began a harassment campaign, working with YouTubers and hiring other people to vandalize the store and commit crimes against the store, instead of working through the process.

McAllister told me at the time he was a corporate support person and had been working with the stores in the area. He said that Law called him because the new owner was stepping in to take over the store. McAllister said he was under the impression that Law understood what was going on and that she was ready for the new person to come in and take the keys. McAllister said that when he entered the call with Law, she was frustrated, being obstinate, and stopping them from being able to move forward. McAllister said he was working under the guidance that they were taking over the store due to violations with the franchise agreement. He said that Law may have mentioned the consignment agreement in passing, but it was not clear what she was referring to, because the franchise agreement prohibits consignment agreements. He said that she ended up having an agreement, but that was a violation of the franchise policy, so they weren't sure what she was actually talking about when she made mention of that that night.

McNeff said corporate took over the store for a short period of time, and the prospective new owner helped with the inventory that night. He said neither he nor McAllister knew how exactly the inventory was conducted. McNeff said he believed a document was produced showing what was in the store and the market value. He did not know where that document currently was. McAllister added that they often use a retail inventory method in which products are grouped together because of the complexity of the product. McNeff later added that he did not know the methodology used to conduct the inventory, but it was done by an existing franchisee who knew how to conduct an inventory and would have done a thorough job. I asked McNeff if he would be able to provide a copy of the inventory and he told me I would need to request that through their attorney's office.

McNeff told me that they had been reporting the fraud to the Keizer Police Department and the Marion County Sheriff's Office. He explained that it appeared Mansell, Law, and Schneider were collaborating to commit fraud against the business. He said that Mansell hired a YouTuber who goes by the moniker "Reckless Ben", who is Schneider. He said that Schneider was hired to come to Oregon and vandalize and harass the store. He said Schneider then committed theft by creating and distributing fictitious gift certificates to people in public for use in the store. He said they filed multiple court claims against the store, but they filed it to wrongful parties and used what appeared to be fictitious names. He said they also created a fake contract and forged the store manager's signature on that contract in an attempt to extort thousands of dollars from the store. McNeff said that they are also engaged in what appears to be a proxy battle. He explained that Schneider flew to Utah, to BAM offices, and began harassing corporate staff. He said they have attempted to extort money out of the corporate side of things by hiring an attorney to extort money and threatening to release fraudulent and damaging videos that they have cut and spliced together.

McNeff said the dispute over the inventory is a civil matter. He said that Mansell has decided not to pay an attorney to pursue matters. He said that instead, they are using force, coercion, and extortion to commit crimes in order to do it. McNeff said that BAM was happy to coordinate and look at this through the legal side of things, which BAM is still attempting to do. He said they (Mansell) have hired an attorney, but he feels like it is just an attempt to further their extortion methods. He added that their attorney can at least provide them with the appropriate legal advice on how to proceed. He said BAM is trying to report all the stuff outside the bounds of the law. He said everything else is still a contractual issue between the parties.

I asked McNeff when Law was notified that her store would be taken over. McNeff said that she was notified one to two days beforehand. He recalled that most of these communication occurred over the phone. McNeff said that Law had messaged them about a week earlier, letting them know that her partner, who is also a franchisee, had gotten a job in Europe, so they were leaving and would be closing the store. McNeff said that was not how things worked, and they needed to coordinate to make that transition. He said Law had not actually finished their purchase agreement for the store because they were buying it over time and had stopped making payments. McNeff said because of all these things, BAM was just going to take over the store. He said Law agreed to this, and they coordinated a day to do it. McNeff said it was explained to Law that someone would come to take an inventory, and they would be good to go. McNeff said that when the day came and someone showed up, Law became very belligerent, and it was surprising to them.

McNeff said at the time Law owed BAM around $100,000. He said she also had $48,000 remaining to complete the purchase of the business, so she owed anywhere from $100,000 to $150,000 to BAM. McNeff said that when they got into the store, the inventory was nowhere near that amount. He said that through the franchise agreement, they have the right to offset the amount of money. He added that the purchase of the store had not been completed or fully transferred, and with Law saying she was abandoning the store, they terminated the franchise agreement. He said the store and all of its assets reverted back to BAM. He said that all the contracts that Law signed and agreed to notify them of that, but they just don't want to accept that.

McNeff said that Mansell does not want to accept that the agreements he made were with a completely different party than the one that took over the store. McNeff said that BAM took over the assets of the store to pay the debt owed to them. He added that any additional debts between Laws LLC and Mansell are between those two parties, and the liability of the former franchisee does not transfer to them when they took back over the store. He said that was a separate agreement that was a violation of their rules and policies. He said that the fact that Law lost all the assets to pay Mansell is an issue Law has to deal with and has nothing to do with the assets they seized, under their contract with Law. McNeff said that there are two separate issues occurring and Mansell is trying to lump them into one issue. McNeff said he understood why Mansell thought this, but the reality was that they did not take on the liability from Law and Mansell should be going after Law for the money owed to him under that contract.

McAllister added that Law was not good at keeping records. He said that they did not have a real way to know what was Mansell's because there was not a lot of documentation. McNeff said they tried to communicate this to Mansell and work with him, but he chose to harass the store and try to extort money. He said that because Mansell is not abiding by the law, they will not cooperate with him, as they have no legal obligation to do so. He said they tried to help Mansell. At one point, an attorney reached out to them, but then that attorney and Mansell ignored their attempts to contact them.

I asked McNeff if any documents were signed when the store was being taken over. McNeff told me they sent a notice of termination explaining that, under the franchise agreement and the original store purchase agreement, if any defaults occur, which Law had a significant number of defaults due to her continuous missed payments. He said that, because of this, nothing had to be signed. He said franchise agreements are written to ensure that franchisees don't do dumb things and don't harm the rest of the franchise brand. He said they have strict, robust legal language that gives them the right to take over at a moment's notice if certain violations occur. McNeff further explained that if the assets of the store were in excess of what was owed, they would be required to pay that money back. He said that was not the case here because the value of the fixtures and inventory was not even close to the amount owed.

I asked McNeff if Mansell ever provided them with an inventory of what he had in the store. McNeff said that Mansell provided them with a spreadsheet, but they had no way to verify it. He said the claimed value was way off base because the amount Mansell claimed was in the store was not in the store when the inventory was taken. He said they could not just take Mansell's word for it and inquired if there was an agreement on how things were marked. McNeff said part of the store's business is buying inventory from customers daily. He said it was not feasible to determine what was purchased and what was consigned, and that Mansell came in with a spreadsheet saying everything in the store was his, which was not going to work.

McNeff said they tried to work with Mansell, but he became belligerent and demanded all his money. McNeff said some of the inventory may have been set aside, which they thought might be part of Mansell's collection, but he refused to work with them. He said Mansell demanded $200,000 and would not take anything back. McNeff explained that Mansell appeared to be inflating the value of the inventory in the first place because the spreadsheet he provided did not arrive at that amount. He said that the value of the inventory in the store was not at that level either. McNeff deduced that Law had already sold the items and not paid Mansell, and was trying to shift the liability to the corporation. McNeff said he had been willing to work with Mansell, but he had taken additional steps, causing them to have to defend themselves against fictitious lawsuits and other types of things to the point that they are less willing to work with him unless he is willing to pay them for legal expenses they have incurred.

I asked McNeff whether he had knowledge of items from Mansell's collection being in the store. He explained that he did not know what the current owner had done with items that had potentially been from Mansell's collection after he refused to cooperate. McNeff denied that the corporation was in control of the store at the time. He said the corporation took over the store for a period of time, and then it was transferred to the new owner, Best and Johnson. McNeff said Best and Johnson are working with corporate to transition the store to someone else or back to corporate because of all the issues with the store. McNeff explained that they had been well within their legal rights to take possession of the store and all of its assets, and then sell them to someone else. Regardless of who may have originally put the assets in that store that is a contractual issue. But them selling to somebody else did not transfer the liability that Law incurred to Mansell. He said that even if there were items sitting in that store, they don't belong to Mansell anymore. McNeff said that they vetted this information with their attorneys and how to handle this situation. He said they tried to work with Mansell and he has been silent, so they assumed he didn't care anymore. McNeff had no knowledge of the non-disclosure agreement being offered to Mansell and assumed that was something Best and Johnson were doing.

Crystal Law Interview

On 03/03/26, I spoke with Law by phone, this call was recorded (JIW9).

Law told me she was the owner of the franchise LLC when Mansell brought a large Lego collection to the store. The LLC and Mansell entered into a written consignment agreement to sell the collection. She explained that Mansell's father had kept a list of what was in the collection, but when she reviewed it, she found errors and corrected portions of the list after identifying mislabeled sets and minifigures, which she shared with Mansell. Law estimated that approximately one-third to one-half of the collection had been sold prior to her removal from the store; however, she no longer has access to the point-of-sale (POS) system to confirm exact figures. She said that the corporate headquarters has access to all sales data.

Law told me she and her husband made plans to move to Europe and informed BAM of this to see what their options were with the franchise. Law said that in or around mid-November, corporate representatives from BAM informed her that an individual from the Eugene location wished to view the store as a potential purchaser. She stated Best arrived at the store near or after she closed the store, Best informed her that she was to turn over her keys. She stated she was told that corporate was assuming ownership and responsibilities of the store. Law said the locks were changed that night and she was locked out of all the store systems, email, POS, and accounts. She said that corporate threatened to contact the police if she did not comply with relinquishing control of the premises.

Law said that during a phone call that evening with McAlister, she informed corporate of the existing consignment with Mansell. She advised that the consigned sets were in the back of the store, and minifigures were displayed separately. She reported that she told them she had a spreadsheet on the store's Google Docs account documenting the inventory. According to Law, she was told corporate would assume control and responsibility for all matters tied to the LLC, including the consignment. Law stated she requested a full inventory be conducted that night but was unable to complete one herself before leaving. She reported corporate guaranteed an inventory would be completed, but she has not received one to date. She advised that this issue is currently part of ongoing civil litigation between herself and the corporation.

Law said she had marked Mansell's consigned items, with Lego sets marked with removable yellow yard-sale style stickers placed over barcodes to identify them as consignment items. Minifigures had small stringed price tags attached. She said she also created specific tracking entries in the POS system so consigned items would register under a designated item category. She stated that she took photographs and video of the inventory before leaving the store. She reported that Mr. Mansell sent someone to the store a few days after the takeover, and at that time, the tags were reportedly still present. She stated she was later informed that the tags were subsequently removed. Law said she previously provided video and documentation to another Keizer Police officer and to Mansell.

Law said she brought some minifigures home to inventory and identify them because of the large volume (approximately 2,000 individual minifigures). She also stated some items were transported to comic conventions. She explained that while preparing to move, she located a box containing some of Mansell's items that had not been unpacked from a convention. She stated she returned those items to Mansell prior to leaving the country. She reported she completed an inventory of those returned items and that Mr. Mansell signed documentation acknowledging receipt. She said she did not retain any of Mr. Mansell's property. According to Law, all remaining inventory was either returned to Mansell or left inside the store at the time corporate assumed control.

Law advised she is currently involved in ongoing litigation with corporate regarding the takeover, financial matters, and alleged defamation. She reported disputes regarding royalty payments and lease assignment issues under the franchise agreement. Crystal said she did not inform Mansell prior to the takeover that she was leaving the country, as she anticipated corporate would buy out the store and Mansell could be paid with the remaining inventory value. Law learned the store has since closed and she documented the closure at the request of her attorney.

Interview of [REDACTED] S [REDACTED] by phone.

On 03/03/26 at about 1445, I spoke with [REDACTED] S [REDACTED] by phone, I recorded the conversation (JIW10).

S [REDACTED] confirmed she previously worked at the Bricks & Minifigs store in Keizer while Crystal Law was the owner and manager. S [REDACTED] said, one day, she reported to work, and Law was no longer present. S [REDACTED] said the new owner, Best, informed her that Law had been removed from the business with an agreement with BAM.

When asked about a large collection of Star Wars LEGO sets, S [REDACTED] stated that the collection was at the store, though it had arrived prior to her employment. She said the Star Wars sets were generally more valuable than other merchandise. S [REDACTED] stated she was unaware of any concerns regarding the collection until after Law left the business. I asked whether any sets were marked differently. S [REDACTED] stated she observed some sets with colored stickers placed over the barcodes, but believed these were for inventory purposes. She did not recall ringing up any of those particular items and did not know if they were processed differently at the register. S [REDACTED] further stated that she recalled numerous minifigures with white strings and tags attached. She stated she believed these also related to inventory, as many of those figures were higher priced. She reported that no one explained to her that the colored stickers or white tags signified consignment items until after Best took over ownership.

S [REDACTED] estimated she worked at the store for approximately two to three months while Law was still the owner. After Best assumed control of the store, S [REDACTED] stated the items with colored stickers and tagged minifigures remained marked but were removed from the sales floor. She stated she was told the items were part of a consignment arrangement and needed to be removed. She further stated that for a period of time, the inventory was stored in the back of the store. When asked about quantities, S [REDACTED] estimated there were approximately three shelves containing roughly 25–35 boxed Star Wars sets marked with colored stickers. She estimated there were approximately 100 minifigures marked with white tags, which she believed were later kept in the safe.

S [REDACTED] stated that she had no knowledge of the consignment details until after Best took over the business. She reported that Best initially provided only a vague explanation, and more specific information regarding the consignment situation was not explained until several weeks later. S [REDACTED] additionally reported that near the end of her employment under Best's ownership, she and another employee were not paid for several months. She stated that Law had consistently paid her on time during her tenure as owner. S [REDACTED] indicated she observed what she described as potentially "shady" behavior under Best's management but did not provide specific details beyond the payroll issue.

Interview with [REDACTED] X

On 03/03/26 at about 1515 hours, I spoke with [REDACTED] F [REDACTED] by telephone. I recorded this phone conversation (JIW11).

F [REDACTED] confirmed that she is a former employee of the Bricks & Minifigs store in Keizer and stated she worked there for approximately three years before being laid off approximately one to two months ago. F [REDACTED] stated she was originally hired under former owner Crystal Law. I asked F [REDACTED] about her knowledge regarding the store coming into possession of numerous Star Wars Lego sets. F [REDACTED] believed the items were purchased by Law and heard that documents were allegedly forged under the Bricks & Minifigs name to establish a consignment-type arrangement. F [REDACTED] said that, according to what she was told, a portion of the proceeds from any sold Star Wars sets was to be set aside for the individual who originally sold the collection to the store. F█ clarified that Bricks & Minifigs does not normally conduct business on consignment. F█ stated she did not have independent knowledge of the alleged forged documents and learned of the situation after Law left ownership and Best assumed control of the store. F█ said Best vaguely informed her of what had occurred.

F█ told me that after Law left, the individual who sold the Lego collection was attempting to retrieve the merchandise. F█ was aware that corporate representatives declined to return the LEGO sets but offered a monetary settlement instead. According to F█ the individual reportedly wanted both the LEGO items and monetary compensation, which corporate declined. F█ added that the individual attempting to recover the Lego items contacted the store repeatedly and involved YouTube content creators in the matter.

F█ stated the Star Wars Lego sets were marked with small yellow stickers on the bottom of the boxes and were entered into inventory under a specific Star Wars designation when sold. She indicated she was instructed to process them in this manner but was not told why. F█ estimated that at the time Law left ownership, there were over approximately 60 boxed LEGO Star Wars sets remaining in the store bearing yellow stickers. She also estimated there were approximately 20 Star Wars minifigures marked with white tags attached by a string. F█ stated that after Best assumed ownership, some of the yellow stickers were removed from sets. She indicated this occurred immediately after Best took over operations, though she could not identify which specific sets had their stickers removed.

F█ stated that some of the sets remained displayed for sale on the sales floor after Law left, while others were moved to a storage container in the back of the store. She believed the items were moved off the sales floor due to "drama" surrounding the situation. F█ confirmed that prior to her layoff, the remaining items were still present in the store. F█ also stated Law had told her that additional Star Wars Lego sets from the same collection were being stored at Law's residence due to the volume of the merchandise. F█ reported that Law told her she kept larger sets in a guest room and described having an entire room dedicated to the remaining Lego collection. F█ did not know the quantity of sets stored at the residence.

Investigation Conclusion

It is clear from a review of this case that Mansell and Law entered into an agreement allowing Law to sell Lego sets under Mansell's ownership, using her storefront. Documents provided indicated that Law was active in selling Mansell's property and paying Mansell monthly. Law lost ownership of the store and control over Mansell's property when BAM Franchise took over the store. The BAM storefront was taken over by Best and Johnson, and Best was present at the takeover of the store. Based on the evidence presented, it is clear that the BAM Franchise and Best were informed of and aware of Mansell's property being present in the store on consignment under an agreement with Mansell and Law. BAM and Johnson make recorded statements that they are aware of Mansell's property being in the store, and both acknowledge that sets from Mansell's collection are still there. The parties are unable or unwilling to reach an agreement, with one side claiming it is a civil matter and the other claiming it is a criminal matter.

This case has previously been referred to the Marion County District Attorney's Office and deemed civil in nature. I am referring this case to the District Attorney's Office again after I have conducted an extensive review of the available evidence and witness statements for legal review and consideration for applicable criminal charges.
